

Dr. Tetsuya Kobayashi

Chief Director

Japan Small Animal Cancer Center

Dr. Kobayashi received his veterinary degree from Nippon Veterinary and Animal Science University in 1994. He then studied at Purdue University, which was followed by a residency program in medical oncology at North Carolina State University. In 2001, Dr. Kobayashi became the first board certified oncologist in Japan after attaining board certification in veterinary oncology by the American College of Veterinary Internal Medicine (ACVIM). He is now director of both the Japan Veterinary Corporative Oncology Group (JVCOG) since 2010 and the Japanese Foundation of Veterinary Specialists Scholarship (JFVSS) since 2011. In addition, he is an invited specialist of the Asian College of Veterinary Internal Medicine (AiCVIM) since 2015.

Currently, Dr. Kobayashi is the chief director of the Japan Small Animal Cancer Center; a center that receives approximately 550 new cases and 3,500 rechecks per year. He is also interested in teaching, and provides more than 150 continuing education courses for domestic and international veterinarians every year.
